and bitter condemnation of the administration's course in Mexico was delivered Thursday night by former United States senator Albert J. Beveridge, at the formal opening of the Republican speaking campaign at the Auditorium here. His speech carried s strong Intervention tings.

Concerning Mexican affairs, he said,

Concerning Mexican affairs, he said, in part:

"The administration found a de facto government atronger than any since the regime of Diaz. That government had been recognized by Great Britain. France, Germany, Russia, Japan and other powers, upon the advice of their seasoned diplomatic representatives who had long been on the ground and knew the facts. Yet the administration did not content likely with refusing to recognize this de facto government, but ordered it to dissolve without a successor to take its place. The administration did this upon the pretexts that the de facto Mexican government had not gained power necording to the constitution and laws of that country and that the de facto president was stained with orime. Yet since then the administration has non-chalannty recognized a government in Peru set up in a single night by force and murder.

"On purely moral grounds, these pretexts would make us the arbiter in every contested change of government on earth and involve us as the deciding party in every revolution that socure in any land. If the pretext that Huerta held the presidency through intrigue and bloodshed is a sound reason for the administration's action, then the American government ought in like manner to have demanded that the king of Servia quit the throne to which he had been lifted by murder and conspiracy.

America's Special Duty in Mexico. America's Special Duty in Mexico.

What, then, is that peculiar interest and special Guty? Was it for depose the only government in Mexico because our president did not like the Mexican president? Was it to choose now this factional leader and now that bundit chief to be king for a day? Was it our interest and duty to abandon American men and women to outrage and murder. American property to pillage and destruction, American rights to insult and mockery?

Did not our ordinary interest and common duty in Mexico require that American property protected, American rights upheld?

Why Americans Went to Mexico,
"But the administration looks upon
Americans in Mexico as shifty adventurers, their investments as dishonorable hazards, their rights as fraudulent claims.
